MI. J. ROSE THE BEAVER SALOON. EW ROLE-NOT TELLING # TRUTH!

MANY YEARS AGO, WHEN I WAS AN apprentice in '47 and '48, we shop beys used to go Coo g down on the South Branch of the Raritan River, nea bunting down on the South Branch of the Raritan River, near Cull's Mills, New Jersey. So one night we tracket an did Coon to a large Sycamore or Bulloowood tree, we forced where the old Coon went in. The hote was about one hundred and seventy feet from the ground. "Hold on Rose, cannot you take off a few inches of that." No. I don't think I can unless that Carriage Maker that established a Carriage Shop in Eighteen Hundred and Sixty-five in Honolulu, if he comes down four or five years, I then will drop from four to five feet. At any rate the hole was so high that none of as boys could get to it. We called on the owner of the tree and he would not allow the tree to be cut. We heard the story, and our blood was stirred. So we mustered a party of about fifteen of the best of US boys and went for the old Coon. We were bound to have him anyhow. None of us boys could climb up to the hole, so we were puzzled what to do, finally we gazed out the hole where the old Coon was, so high up in the great tree, and we not having the grimning capacity of the renowned David Crockett or the musical powers to charm, we resorted to strategy. Yes, as Artenus Ward would say, strategy my boys. Three boys were dispatched for a large bottle of petroleum oil. "Hold on Loke, we had no petroleum them days." I mean they went for he largest poles to attach togethet to reach the hole. The bottle of turpentine was hung to the end of the pole, and then reised up to the hole, and thrust partly into it, we than took a shot gun and shot the bottle to pieces, the contents ran down into the tree, but no Coon appeared, we then attached a lighted torch and raised it to the hole.

peared, we then attached a lighted torch and raised it to the Then came a bust of thundering sound, That Coon, Oh, where was he? Ask of the flames that leaped around That hole, in the old Buttonwood tree. He came tearing out with a bound, At one awful leap, he reached the ground, And found himself in ROSE'S SHOP, where
